

Restorative Practices Cultivating Positive Environments and Cultures

The restorative practice framework is a systematic approach that focuses on building and maintaining positive relationships, repairing harm caused by conflicts or misconduct, promoting accountability, and fostering a sense of community and well-being. Restorative practices are rooted in restorative justice principles and aim to create a culture of empathy, respect, and collaboration within communities, organizations, and institutions.

Participants will:

Gain understanding of a comprehensive and structured approach to promoting positive relationships, resolving conflicts, and creating a culture of empathy, accountability, and collaboration within communities and organizations. Learn how the restorative practice framework supports the development of a restorative and supportive environment that fosters healing, growth, and positive transformation.
